
The Three Daughters of Madame Liang by Pearl S. Buck.

Miss Bucks first novel of China in 12 years tells the story of Madame Liang, the proprietor of the most fashionable restaurant in Shanghai. Despite Communist austerity, intrigue, Red Guards, she somehow manages to provide government foods and elegant service, and her clientele includes the highest officials, the most successful merchants, the top military officers. But she retains her loyalty to her American friends, and send her three daughters - Grace, Mercy, and Joy to America to be educated. This their story, too, of their conflicts of loyalties, their divergent ways and careers, all of which illuminate the realities and dilemmas of China today.

Detection Unlimited by Georgette Heyer

First American publication of a mystery set in an English village, where Miss Heyer's incomparable detective, Chief-Inspector Hemingway, encounters special difficulties in solving the murder of a man nobody liked. Too many amateur detectives get in the way.

Bachelor Doctor by Elizabeth Seifert

A novel about an idealistic young doctor and his battle for reforms in medical services and hospital procedure.

Come Gentle Spring by Jesse Stuart

A new collection of 20 Appalachian stories, nine of which have never before been published. Others have appeared in Esquire magazine. The characters are now familiar to Jesse Stuart's readers - his father, mother, grandfather, cousins, aunts and uncles - the people of his country.

Except For Me and Thee by Jessamyn West

A companion to The Friendly Persuasion, telling the story of the Quaker couple, Jess and Eliza Birdwell - young and in love, meeting the challenge of the land as the growing family travels west, then encountering the bitterness of man's savagery in the Civil War, guiding their children through the confusing after math, and finally looking at their world with bittersweet maturity.

How Many Pies From - 'Tater?

No one handy had any accurate guess about how many "sweet 'tater" pies this giant would make, but for Perry Cumbie of Appomattox, a three and one-half pound sweet potato was quite a sight from his garden which he says has been quite productive this year. Throughout the county gardeners seem pleased with their vegetables and fruit this year, and pleasant autumn weather has meant roses still in bloom and bright splashes of chrysanthemums and other fall flowers to please homemaker and visitor.

Lee Stops Again At Appomattox

Lee and Traveller were there, but this time it was Russell Lee and his wife from Gilliam, Missouri, stopping over on Thursday evening, Oct. 16 at Traveler's Inn.

Mr. Lee's grandfather, Edward S. Lee, was a kinsman of the famous general and was here at Appomattox on April 9, 1865. Edward Lee, who lived to be 96 years old, treasured a piece of the apple tree under which General Robert E. Lee rested while awaiting the return of a flag of truce sent by him to Gen. U. S. Grant on the morning of the ninth. Mr. Russell Lee says that his grandfather "relived every minute of the War" and rubbed that bit of apple tree limb until it was shiny and smooth.

According to Robert A. O'Brien's account, in "Three Relics of Lee's Surrender" "every particle of the tree even to its very roots, was torn out or broken into bits and carried away as mementos of this notable occasion." The Russell Lees were very much interested in O'Brien's book, remarking that they would probably purchase a copy to add to their collection of "Lee memories."

Looking Up Fore Family

Anyone who knows the history of the Fore family in this part of the country can possibly be of help to Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Warwick of Richmond.

Mrs. Warwick's mother, Addie V. Fore, was born at Evergreen, Virginia in 1886.

Mr. Warwick, retired telephone-communications executive, says his wife is a practicing attorney in Richmond, and he has volunteered (or as he laughingly says, "been indentured") for the task of hunting up family connections.

Addie V. Fore, one of a pair of twins, was the daughter of John Markham (or John W.) Fore and Sallie Evelyn Crawley Fore. Her father (1814-1898) was 72 years old the year she was born. Mr. Warwick says that the "Fore" family has spelled the name many different ways including a "Widow Faure", an indentured servant during Colonial days, who brought her four children with her across the ocean.

Napoleon Seen In Artmobile

When designing figureheads for the bows of ancient sailing ships, carvers frequently chose national leaders and heroes for their subjects instead of the more common legendary and classical figures. This bust of Napoleon, regal in its simplicity is displayed, along with many other works of maritime art in the unusual exhibit in the Virginia Museum Artmobile to be shown in Appomattox, Saturday, October 25 through Friday, Oct. 31.
